

Conference concept “Multiple states: experience and development prospects”

The composite states of antiquity, being a deviation from simple unitarism, in subsequent historical epochs multiplied in their number and typological diversity. Empires, city unions, confederations ... With the beginning of modernization processes at the turn of the XVIII–XIX centuries. the first federated states emerge that more carefully, with due regard for public consent (including elites and ordinary citizens), distribute powers between levels of government.

During the end of the XVIII–XXI centuries. new and new models of federalism are being formed, both more and less centralized. At the same time, at the present moment, the processes of globalization and increasing international turbulence are stimulating the search for other variants of territorial administration, with complex schemes of division of responsibility. These are regionalist states as a kind of compromise between federalism and unitarism, on the one hand, and interstate integration associations – a modern type of confederative, multi-constituent union. All this diversity of complex state and quasi-state entities is to be studied by state scholars, lawyers, political scientists, historians, and it is this scientific conference on May 29–30 that can serve as a springboard for even deeper interdisciplinary analysis in the future.

The conference is attended by 130 speakers (102 reports) from universities in Moscow, St. Petersburg, Irkutsk, Barnaul, Kazan, Nizhny Novgorod, Rostov-on-Don, Saransk, Saratov, Tambov, Sheki (Republic of Azerbaijan), Penza.
